Management's Discussion of Fund Performance

For the period April 14, 2025, to June 30, 2025, SBAR returned 6.52% vs. the return of 15.11% of the S&P 500 Index, underperforming by 8.59%.

SBAR's strong absolute returns were supported by robust equity market performance and a decline in overall market volatility. SBAR's income generation is derived from a combination of Treasury yields and premium income from selling barrier options. On a relative basis, SBAR's performance has been consistent with expectations, reflecting its income-oriented strategy.

Looking ahead, we believe SBAR is well-positioned to appeal to investors seeking high monthly income through barrier option structures, while also offering operational efficiencies typically lacking in traditional structured note investments.
